This week's feature: Connecting with others

During this time, it might feel like it's difficult to connect with others in the same way that you used to. Connecting with others is really important for our wellbeing: it can make our moods better, give us a sense of purpose and stop us feeling isolated. That's why we want to share some ideas and tips for connecting with others despite everything that's going on.

Connecting remotely

A special phone or video call

Talking on the phone or on a video call can be a great way to connect with friends and relatives. To make it extra special, children can try making up a song and/or dance or coming up with a story to share with loved ones during the call. You can see a list of free group video calling apps here - cutt.ly/best-video-call-apps.

'Pub' quiz or book club

Lots of young people and families are already enjoying group video calls with friends and relatives. A fun idea is to have a 'pub quiz' evening. Each person on the call does hosts a 'round', thinking of 5-10 questions on a topic they find interesting. Or try a book/TV/film club where each person takes it in turns to give the group something to watch or read, then discuss in the next video call.

Connecting at home

Sometimes we don't realise we aren't connecting with the people in our home as much as we could be. Try spending time talking without the distraction of any technology. It can also be nice to do activities together that don't involve screens - make a meal together, do some crafts or drawing, or perhaps try out some yoga!

Make and send a virtual card!

Children and young people can show loved ones they are thinking of them by making a special card. Once it's finished, take a picture (with help from parents/carers) and send it to the loved one!

You can make your card from scratch, or print out, colour in and write a message on one of our templates:
